Various internship program applications and information sessions:

Princeton University's Prison Teaching Initiative (PTI) Internship Applications

PTI will be holding a virtual information session for their summer internships tomorrow at 4:00 p.m. at this Zoom link; please encourage all interested participants to join.

This summer, we are offering two internship opportunities to undergraduates from 2- and 4-year institutions:

- Coding Foundations of Research is designed for undergraduates excited to increase their familiarity with computers and includes intensive computer literacy and coding training. Students will apply their new coding skills to analyze scientific data and learn about computer-based research in a variety of STEM and social science fields. Forward your direct questions to Chris Etienne, PTI's student engagement coordinator, at ce6411@princeton.edu.
- Computational Biology Research: Gateway to STEM helps students gain research experience in computational biology, learn the principles of scientific thinking, and understand research scholarship. Each student will work with a faculty mentor and their associated research group. Forward your direct questions to Dr. Bridgett vonHoldt, Princeton associate professor of ecology & evolutionary biology, at vonholdt@princeton.edu.

The deadline for all Princeton internship applications is March 8, 2024!
